Practice it frequently leading up to the test until you're dead bored with it 02-08-2011, 07:46 AM Yes.. Here's an easy way to parallel park: - drive alongside the car in front of the space you wish to park in, until you are right across from the parked vehicle's drivers seat, - Put your car into reverse, slowly back up straight until your rear wheel is across from the next car's back bumper,- turn hard with your steering wheel (swinging the front wheels out into traffic) while looking into your rear view mirror at the the vehicle behind your parking spot,- When you see the curb side headlight of that vehicle in your (inside rear view) mirror, straighten your steering wheel, continuing to back up,- when your front fender passes by the bumper of the car in front of you, turn your wheel hard to swing the front of your car into the parking spot.. Many behind-the-wheel driving tests use cones To begin, set up the cones in a deserted lot or very quiet.. You'll want to practice this move a few times on a low traffic street so as not to get distracted by other moving cars.. Parallel parking is part of the Minnesota drivers test (or at least it was not too long ago). 0041d406d9 Gay Young Army Twinks Tube8 Lola Xbox 360 Webcam Drivers
